“As a Year 11 student, Visual Communication Design was a way I could elaborate upon my creativity within a different environment. I was drawn to its level of freedom with regards to the three design fields, and while Environmental Design and Industrial Design have never been my forte, I enjoyed constructing my own potential products and architectural models and overall developing my personal creative style. The third design field, Communication Design, has become something I may wish to pursue in further years, as its components of packaging and logo design encouraged my drawing and computing skills. There’s an element of professionalism that a student feels designing various products for figurative clients, and that’s something that I experienced in Year 11 VCD. I thoroughly recommend the subject to those who like to express their creative ideas and would like to develop their stylistic flair.”
